HERBAL CREAM FOR THE SUPERFICIAL TREATMENT OF DISEASES
TECHNICAL FIELD

The field of this invention relates to a natural herbal cream for the relief of superficial diseases, and is of particular advantage in the treating of hemorrhoids and cure 80%.

BACKGROUND OF THE PRIOR ART

The usual medical approach to hemorrhoids is surgery. This approach is based on the assumption that what is no longer there cannot bother you. Such a philosophy absolutely ignores the cause, as it concerns itself only with the symptoms. Hemorrhoid surgery is a very painful procedure as well as being quite costly.

There are also available certain creams which when applied to the hemorrhoids causes the hemorrhoids to shrink somewhat thereby relieving discomfort and pain. However, all such previously known creams, though somewhat effective, do not heal. Also, prior art creams are known to contain substances which are somewhat toxic. The use of such toxic substances may cause undesirable side effects in certain individuals.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE INVENTION

The cream of this invention is composed entirely of natural non-toxic ingredients. The base of the cream (the non - active portion) may take any of numerous compositions. However, a preferable composition for the base is to include natural ingredients and oil. While the function is to decrease the inflammation and to eventually eliminate the hemorrhoids. Functions as a natural preservative as well as an antiseptic and also does have some healing qualities.

The primary objective of the composition of this invention is to compose a cream for use in the healing of hemorrhoids and other superficial diseases. The cream is entirely natural in composition and has no side effects in conjunction with its use.

The cream of this invention is especially useful in the treatment of hemorrhoids. A hemorrhoid is defined as a painful swelling or tumor of a vein in the region of the anus. Hemorrhoids is an annoying ailment which has plagued many individuals of all ages and either sex. although it is rare in the very young. The pain may range from simple discomfort to excruciating agony.

Hemorrhoids are caused when the upward flow of blood through the rectal membrane is obstructed. Impending the flow of blood up through the portal vein allows the remaing blood to congest in the veins of the rectum. If the condition continues, the walls of the veins lose their tone and become distended. This distention of blood vessels can be external resulting in the hemorrhoids protruding from the anus. A hemorrhoid can range in size from that of a small pea to that of a walnut. As much discomfort can be experienced from a small hemorrhoid as from a large hemorrhoid.

The distention of blood vessels can be internal when the mucous membrane inside the rectum is the only part affected. With the condition of internal hemorrhoids, there is invariably a group of veins and arteries involved. The blood vessels are in a varicosed condition and are unable to expand or contract according to the amount of blood which is congested in the rectum at any particular time.

If the internal pressure becomes great, the small veins of the rectal membrane can burst, causing a discharge of blood. This discharge relieves the congestion and brings prompt relief to the sufferer. But, unfortunately, such bleeding can sometimes be so frequent and so profuse that the victim develops anemia. There are numerous causes of the hemorrhoids, such as constipation, constant looseness of the bowels, improper diet, congestion of the liver, as well as numerous other rectal problems. Also, there may possibly be a connection between hemorrhoids and a prolonged nervous condition.

This invention is useful in treating open sores, insect bites, cuts and scratches.

The use of the cream is to be direct application to the hemorrhoidal tissues or diseased or injured area. Suggested application of the cream is to be applied to effected areas 1 time a day. Application is to be continued the second day. (oil is 60%, garlic 20% and cumin 20%)
